The Gurnay strain was founded and raced over a period of 50 years between 1850 and 1900. Going back in time we note that the young Gurnay lived in the same town (Verriers) as the pigeon master Alexandre Hansenne who had founded his strain of birds mainly Bronzes, Blues and whites of the Doyard, Comisson and Doyard families. Gurnay soon became Hansenne's runner. Before the advent of Pigeon Clocks and rubber rings the bird after arrival from a race would have to be run in to the clubs head quarters before a prize could be awarded. On one famous race Hansenne told Gurnay if he were to win 1st Prize then he could keep the bird. Gurnay was jubilant when the bird won the race, he took the Blue Hen home and added it to his growing collection of racing pigeons. After Hansenne's death, it was debatable at this time who had the Purest Strain of the Original Hansenne Gurnay acquired the best of his Old Masters birds. These birds formed the strain that would dominate the pigeon world for decades to come. Not only were this strain superb racers but they showed a great outside beauty that is still preserved to this day. I have included on this web site several pictures of the Original Gurnays with their modern day equivalents.

The Gurney Strain of Racing Pigeons

The three illustrations show a bird in flight, likely a penguin, in three different stages of its wing cycle. The first illustration on the left shows the bird with its wings fully extended downwards, as if it is about to take a stroke. The middle illustration shows the bird with its wings partially raised, indicating the start of an upward stroke. The third illustration on the right shows the bird with its wings fully extended upwards, completing the stroke. The bird is depicted in a stylized, almost abstract manner with dark and light areas representing feathers and body. The background is a light, textured grey.

Black Bird Cove, Dartmouth 1937, 1938—
Single Little Mermaid, Jump to Meats, 1939—at Weymouth in strong Coddington Club by margin of 25 yards per minute; 1 brother of the size of 188, won 1st Meadmore for M.
week generally, only 4 birds home on day—two absolutely satisfactory, whatever price is paid

WINNER OF £10,000

IN 2 SEASONS

My Gurnays were the last

importations sent to this country by that great hunter

They are bred from the favorite best birds retained

after his sale of 1936.

I have introduced three pairs

of O. I. Wood's best.
